International Schools and International Education in China (10)

According to the 2014 Open Doors Report from IIE, Chinese student enrollment in American schools increased by 17 percent in total to more than 274,000 students in the 2013/14 academic year, of which 40.3% are at the undergraduate level. On the other side of the Pacific, International Schools boomed in the past decade in China. "International programs at high schools in Nanjing, the capital city of Jiangsu Province, increased from 1 in 2002 to 18 in 2012," said Mr. Chen Zhi wen, chief editor of www.eol.cn. Though the tuition fee is very expensive, wealthy parents would like to send their children to international schools to prepare for overseas study. This issue contains stories of how several students choose international schools, and how they apply to universities in the US or UK.

The Internet Plus Era (50)

What kind of influence the Internet Plus Era will have on the Internet industry and traditional industries and how we should prepare for it was a topic Chinese entrepreneurs discussed at a seminar named Workforce Readiness in China: On the topic of Narrowing the Skills Gap in an Evolving Economy on May 12th, Xu Xiaoping, Founder & Managing Partner of ZhenFund, said, "Like a cup of coffee, you will see the real innovation under the Internet bubble, we should embrace risk." Professor Fan Gang, Director of National Economic Research Institute held that the Internet brings balance, like an express company that serves distant towns and small cities, which helps decrease the urban-rural gap.
