5 Trump's 'New Vision' and China's Diplomatic Options

Ruan Zongze

Significant changes in the international arena and the inauguration of Donald Trump as the new US President make the United States the biggest variable affecting China-US relations. Cooperation widens the prospects for bilateral relations while confrontation narrows them. China is by no means a passive respondent and has the responsibility to actively shape the relationship.

28 Major-Country Diplomacy with Chinese Characteristics Reflects Trends of the Times

Liu Jianfei

Following the trends of the times is the most distinctive feature of China's major-country diplomacy. Having introduced the concepts of a new type of international relations featuring win-win cooperation and a community of shared future for mankind, China's diplomacy has attracted attention from and been welcomed by the international community.

45 Prospects for China-US Relations under the Trump Administration

Wu Xinbo

China-US relations will not be fundamentally changed under the Trump administration but may evolve based on the political philosophy of Trump and his team and overall policy orientation of the US. With more resources, experience and ability than ever in managing its external relations, China should try to achieve mutual adjustment with the United States so they can accommodate each other's key concerns and refrain from frictions.

63 Rethinking Denuclearization on the Korean Peninsula

Yu Shaohua

The chaotic and turbulent situation on the Korean Peninsula in 2016 brought the issue of denuclearization to a crucial juncture and clearly exposed the structural conflicts behind the problem. The parties involved need to face up squarely to the deep-lying contradictions and create conditions for solving fundamental issues.

80 India's Promotion of BBIN Sub-Regional Cooperation: Aspirations and Challenges

Wu Zhaoli

The BBIN Initiative is intended as an important mechanism for India to reshape its regional image and realize regional connectivity and socio-economic development. It reflects India's multiple strategic aspirations. However, it still faces practical difficulties and challenges.

98 Belt and Road Initiative: An Idea Whose Time Has Come

Atul Bhardwaj

The Belt and Road Initiative's alternative transportation routes promise a "community of shared future for mankind," and has the potential to shake the roots of Western hegemony and change the unipolar Euro-Atlantic world order to a multipolar one. India needs to adopt a more pragmatic approach towards the connectivity opportunities coming up in its neighborhood.

110 Trends of International Maritime Politics and China's Strategic Choices

Hu Bo

The new trends of international maritime politics are implicitly changing the world. In the process of moving into the blue waters, China needs to achieve a better balance among multiple missions, such as being aware of its own national conditions, getting familiar with the historical experience of others, and gaining insights into the general trends that are emerging.

134 China's Rise: Historical Inevitability and Realistic Path

Yu Jun

CIIS Vice President Xu Jian's Reinvention and Renewal of Civilizations: Period of Strategic Opportunities in a Historical Perspective attempts to find a pattern for civilizational revival and a realistic path for China's rise through forward-looking research and analysis of the strategic opportunities that China will enjoy over the next ten years.
