5 The Kurdish Issue in the Middle East Context

Dong Manyuan

The Kurdish issue in the Middle East reflects the complex regional ethnic conflicts. The Kurdish independence movement has grown stronger in recent years and it is now an important factor driving the geopolitical evolution of the Middle East, which has been manipulated by both external and regional powers.

24 Global Governance of New Frontiers: China's Perspective

Yang Jian & Zheng Yingqin

The new frontiers for global governance serve as a new stage for international competition and cooperation. By playing a successful role in the governance of these new frontiers, China can facilitate the establishing of a community of shared future for all mankind.

45 China's Role in Peace and Security Cooperation in the Gulf of Guinea Region

Li Xinfeng, Zhang Chunyu & Zhang Mengying

China's participation in peace and security cooperation with the Gulf of Guinea countries boasts sound foundations and has yielded good results. But with the expansion of its interests in the region, China should innovate the concept, give priority to conflict prevention, strengthen its capacity, and get involved in peace and security affairs through multiple channels.

59 Trump's Asia-Pacific Policy: Features and Directions

Liu Qing

Donald Trump's Asia-Pacific policy has witnessed continuous adjustments with a clear priority assigned to major security threats in the region. Despite explicit interests and clear-cut objectives, the effects of Trump's Asia-Pacific policy remain to be seen under the influence of domestic political polarization, the complicated situation in Asia and the design of the broader US global strategy.

78 Germany's Diplomatic Rebalancing and Its Impact on China

Zhao Ke

As the European Union is mired in multiple crises, Germany has been rebalancing its diplomatic priority and attempting to maintain a precarious balance between reaping the economic rewards of globalization and simultaneously promoting European integration. This could lead to an adjustment to Germany's pragmatic China policy, for which China has to make strategic preparations.

93 New Trends and Challenges in China-India Relations

Lin Minwang

While frequent high-level interactions and policy communication have provided stability in China-India relations, the involvement of third parties and changes in India's China policy are eroding the steady development of ties. Coping with a more pragmatic and increasingly self-confident India under Prime Minister Modi will be a test of China's strategic composure and wisdom.

110 Belt and Road Initiative in the Gulf Region: Progress and Challenges

Liu Li & Wang Zesheng

The Belt and Road Initiative has become the main focus of strategic cooperation between China and the Gulf region. Despite the risks derived from regional turbulence and political rivalry among major powers, there remains room for a turnaround in the situation. China should seize this opportunity to enhance pragmatic cooperation.

132 Significance and Security of CPEC: A Pakistani Perspective

Khuram Iqbal

The China-Pakistan Economic Corridor aspires to put Pakistan on a new trajectory of high growth through infrastructure development, and the benefits are likely to amplify and spread throughout the region. Success of this project, however, is highly dependent upon Pakistan's internal security situation and how it manages its relations with India.

148 Cyberspace Security: Trends, Conflicts and Strategic Stability

Xu Longdi

Cyberspace is increasingly considered of equal strategic importance as land, sea, air and space. The current security trends in cyberspace, featuring technological innovation, cyber threats, great-power competition and militarization, has brought the issue of cyber strategic stability to the fore.
