18	●	The Dual Dilemmas of “Make in India”	Mao Keji
		India’s large-scale economy demands full-fledged industrialization to coordinate its domestic development, sustain economic growth and complete its mission of nation-building. However, India’s decades-long industrialization path has encountered twists and turns, until Narendra Modi’s “India Make” initiative started to revitalize its manufacturing sector.
29	●	Democratic Developmental State as the African Model? Experience from Ethiopia	Zhou Jinyan
		As Ethiopia’s national strategy, “Democratic Development State” is a balance between the East Asian “development state” model and Western forces’ requirement for democratization. For over a decade, the “Ethiopian Path” has contributed to Ethiopia’s political integration and economical growth, while also facing a series of challenges.
40	●	Nation and Tribe: Indonesia’s Dual-Track Identity	Sun Yunxiao
		In its post-war modernization process, Indonesia has built a Pancasila national identity in order to unify the once fragmented tribal state. However, tensions between tribal tradition and national identity still exist in terms of customary laws or local separation movements. As a trade-off, a nation-tribe dual-track identity was formed.
49	●	How Did Brazil’s Industrialization Fail? A Monetary Policy Perspective	Wang Fei
		The premature deindustrialization is the main cause for Brazil’s unsuccessful modernization, while copying Western development model and rigid monetary policy is a major institutional reason for Brazil’s deindustrialization. Against the background of global “reindustrialization”, Brazil needs to revitalize its manufacturing industry.
57	●	The Chilean Model: Institutional Construction and Economic Takeoff	Lu Siheng
		Chile’s sound institutional conditions have provided an essential support for its economy takeoff and sustainable development by enhancing the stability and predictability of policy implementation, the sustainability and counter-cyclical of institutional arrangements, and the open and diverse concepts of outward development.

76	● Five-Year Plan: An Objective-Based Governance System	Yan Yilong
	Since the 1950s, China's national Five-Year Plans have formed an objective-based governance system, which includes three major mechanisms: objective matching, objective implementation and objective adjustment. The system guarantees China's strong objective-fulfilling capacity, and demonstrates China's unique institutional advantages.

● Technology Revolution and Social Change

88	● "Robotization": Technological Upgrading and Its Impact	Xu Yi, Xu Hui
	China's industrial upgrading involves two types of robotization: the "intelligentization" strategy which aims at enhancing product quality and capturing market opportunities and the "labor saving" strategy which aims at increasing productivity and saving labor cost. Both types of robotization will result in a polarization of labor structure. While some workers may be able to upskill themselves, the majority gets deskilled.

● Transformation of Social Structure

104	● China's Returning Migrant Workers Under Financial Crisis	Zhang Shiyong Wang Shanshan
	Statistics suggest that China's migrant workers are returning to central and western provinces and their outflow areas on a significant scale since 2008. Such trend does not mean the end of rural labor outflow, but rather a constant circular flow between cities, small towns and villages.

122	● Huntington: A Realistic Conservative	Ou Shujun
	Across his 60 years of academic career, Huntington has displayed a coherent stance of realistic conservatism. This attitude ran through his criticism of American's over-idealistic liberalism, his revelation of America's conservative cultural roots as well as his famous conclusion "Clash of Civilizations".

● World View

132	● New Media, New Politics? – Behind the Brexit Vote	Zuo Can
	The data breach scandal in Brexit exhibits the huge political manipulative capability of new media. However, new media does not naturally lead to new politics. The current crisis has its root in the historical problems of the 1970's Britain. Combined with big data and algorithm, new media provides more effective methods to take advantage of the voters' disappointments and frustrations.
