UN Studies

- UN Reform and the Future of Global Governance Research Group, CICIR 1
- The authority and efficiency of the United Nations have weakened leading to a serious deficit in global governance. A United Nations with stronger representative and operational powers is needed to construct the more open, inclusive, collaborative and effective framework required for global governance in the 21st century. China should and will play a leading role in the UN's future efforts.

China's Public Diplomacy

- The "China Story" and China's International Image Chu Shulong 14
- On the brightly-lit, intensely watched world stage, creating a positive international image involves advancing "Chinese stories" in the best manner possible and giving Chinese views on the "stories" that crop up. China's international image requires precise language, clear expression, and, above all, the best "stories" told well.

European Studies

- The Greek Crisis and Prospects for European Integration Zhang Jian 28
- The enduring Greek crisis has bruised mutual trust and heightened unease between EU members. It is a reflection of deep-seated problems with, and conflict over, European integration and involves harm inflicted on democratic principles, and the revival of nationalism. However, the crisis has also demonstrated the Eurozone's resilience and ability to handle pressure. German-led policies of fiscal austerity and structural reform have been protected. Integration will proceed in a roundabout manner.
- An Analysis of EU-Japan Strategic Double-Track Talks Xin Hua 48
- In March 2013, the EU and Japan opened two strategic negotiations — the EU-Japan Strategic Partnership Agreement (SPA) talks and the EU-Japan Free Trade Agreement (FTA) negotiations. The EU has focused its attention on FTA negotiations, but Japan is more interested in security cooperation and so has focused more on the EU-Japan SPA. These strategic dual-track negotiations will also influence the strategic order and eventually restrict EU-China relations.

The Surge in Popularity for Non-traditional Candidates: Implications for 2016 US Presidential Elections

Zhang Zhixin 64

The surge in popularity for non-traditional candidates ahead of the US 2016 presidential primaries is not only a reflection of the mentality of American society — one that is increasingly anti-establishment, anti-globalization and exclusionist — but it will also have a significant impact on elections in several ways, including campaign agenda-setting, competition between nominees, and, of course, the final election result.

Reflections on Maritime Disputes and US-China Relations

Fu Yu 72

US-China tensions and distrust on maritime issues have been escalating in recent years. The US's pivot towards the Asia-Pacific region has only exacerbated mutual distrust. Many US scholars and officials have voiced concerns that a rising China will transform the status quo of the Asia Pacific region. This article will delve into the interactions between the two countries on maritime security post-World War II and offer some suggestions to ease tensions.

Private Military Companies and Their Influence on International Security

Liu Bo & Yang Tianna 84

The boom in use of private military companies is closely linked to the U.S. global strategic blueprint as well as to the contemporary inclination toward outsourcing, the ambiguity in international law, and today's military insurgencies. As nations and separatist groups continue their objectives in secret, the companies they hire contribute to threats to national sovereignty, distort the criteria for legal access to war, violate human rights, hamper predictions for conflict outcomes, and create regulatory chaos.

American Hegemony Decline and the Doha Dilemma —Analysis Based on the Theory of Structural Power

Tu Xinquan, Su Xiao & Yao Yuan 100

No substantive progress has been achieved in the Doha Round of WTO negotiations since its launch in 2001. At the root of this deadlock in multilateral trading talks is the power imbalance inherent in US hegemony decline. Using Susan Strange's structural power theory, the analysis finds several important changes that have affected the transformation of American structural power and WTO's Doha Round.

Impact of Science and Technology on International Relations in the Digital Era

Alexey V. Biryukov 114

Progress in science and technology developing concurrently with the global revolution in information and the transition to a multipolar world have thrust upon international relations the imperative to establish a global technology alliance. Russia suggests that a universal, binding instrument to guarantee the international information security and a code of behavior within the global information space should be constructed under the aegis of the United Nations.
