Sustainable development is the core content of the scientific development outlook. It refers to the development of capabilities satisfying not only the demands of the current generation but also that of the future generations. Realizing sustainable development of the local records cause is the basic objective of local records work in the new era, and the direction local records workers are striving for. In combination with the practice of local records work in Shandong Province, five links need to be strengthened in order to realize sustainable development of the local records cause: directing sustainable development with way of thinking in keeping with the advancement of the times; servicing sustainable development with innovative work items; pushing forward sustainable development with effective achievements of local records reading and usage; guaranteeing sustainable development with regulatory system covering the whole province; and supporting sustainable development with concrete and effective incentive mechanism.

Reflections on the Sustainable Development Strategic Positioning of the Henan History and Local Records Cause Huo Xianzhang (33)

Currently the development of the Henan history and local records cause is faced with three big trends, three big challenges, and three higher requirements. Under such backgrounds, to guarantee sustainable development of the history and local records cause, we must stick to seven principles, realize coordinated development from nine aspects including “local records, yearbooks, magazines, newspapers, websites, archives, museums, research, and application”, concretely and correctly deal with ten relations in the process of the development of history and local records cause, establish strategic thinking and concepts, set strategic goals for the future development of the history and local records cause, and push forward the scientific development of the history and local records cause of Henan Province with innovative spirits. To realize sustainable development of the Henan history and local records cause, the development strategy of “three – in – one” must be implemented, specifically speaking, the strengthening of team building, the reinforcing of basic safeguards, and innovating history and local records achievements.

The Displaying, Communication and Participation of Local Records Cultural Construction in the New Era Wang Yi (38)

Local records culture falls within the scope of Chinese culture. Local records cultural construction is determined by the demands of the age, the demands of expression, the demands of communication, and the demands of participation. Local records culture has its characteristics, and its construction should be reflected under the background of the current big boom and big prosperity of culture.

On the Sections and Chapters Setup of the Finance · Taxation Sections of Second – round County (City) Records Jin Xiongbo (40)

With some of second – round county (city) records, there are problems of incomplete sections and chapters setup; omissions of key elements such as finance and taxation structural reform, income and expenditure outside budget, balance of finance income and expenditure, and asset management; inappropriate categorization of sections and chapters setup; and titles falling short of standards. The setting up of Finance · Taxation Sections in second – round county (city) records should start from the functions of finance and taxation administrative management, taking the compilation principle of “categorizing by types of things, and grouping different categories into one local records” as the basic thoughts in sections and chapters setup on the macro level, and finance and taxation structural reform, financial income and expenditure, financial management, taxation and taxation management as contents of the main body. Meanwhile, the sections and chapters in Finance · Taxation Sections in second – round county (city) records must pay attention to issues such as clarifying firstly the systems, sticking to the principle of “horizontal arrangement of categories”, the completeness of recorded reference materials, and following the categorizing methods in “Categorization Standards of Industries and Professions in the National Economy”.

Discussions about the Recording of Customs in Second – round Local Records Zhang Fengyu (43)

Currently there are many problems with the recording of customs in some second – round local records being published: firstly imprecise names, mostly shown as ambiguity and differences of realization and understanding of concepts such as customs, trends, habitudes, folk customs, etiquette, fashion, and natural conditions; secondly missing or omission of customs contents, some without chapters and sections on customs, some without customs contents, some lack of categories and items; thirdly production customs are mostly recorded as related to agricultural production; and fourthly unclear relations and inappropriate treatment of customary items and related subjects. Second – round local records should use “customs” as the name of category, and strive to record regional customs comprehensively and scientifically on the premise of collectively reflecting the full picture of regional customs, borrowing from content classification theories from modern customs studies in combination with local records styles.

A Watershed of Old Local Records of Beijing – On Miyun County Records of the Third Year of the Republic of China Liu Wenjuan (49)

Miyun County Records of the third year of the Republic of China is the first local records compiled during the Republican Period in the Beijing region. On the basis of inheriting the compilation traditions of old local records in the past, it presented some new features of the age in terms of content and style, such as maps and recordings of democratic self – governing bodies, reforms of schools, and mineral resources classification. From “Paper Price Soars in Luoyang” to Local Records in the Fu Style Jiang Jing (55)

The style of local records is not restricted to one form or another, with a variety of the prose style, the pianli style, the cifu style, and poetic style. The author starts with the idiom “paper price soars in Luoyang (because of popularity of new work)”, through quotations of a great many ancient documents and reference materials, traces the origin, development, and historical inheritance of local records in the fu style, analyzes the application of the cifu style in local records, and further points out that the earliest local records in rhymed form came from the pictorial comments in some provincial government office walls during the Eastern Han Dynasty and the Nanzhou Records of Strange Things from the Kingdom of Wu during the Three Kingdoms Period.

Mongolian Studies and Inner Mongolia Local Records Fu Rong (58)

Mongolian studies are closely related with Inner Mongolian local records. Inner Mongolian local records contain part of the contents of Mongolian studies. The territorial scope of Mongolian studies is more extensive than Inner Mongolian local records. During first – round Inner Mongolian local records compilation, attention to the intertwining relationship between the two was not well paid. In terms of using Mongolian studies reference materials, there were problems of incomplete and inaccurate reference materials, incomprehensive, bearing no features of the times, and having no territorial characteristics. This article, in combination with first – round Inner Mongolian local records compilation practice, and on the basis of expounding the relationship between Mongolian studies and Inner Mongolian local records, discusses how to deal with the relationship between the two during second – round local records compilation.

On How to Compile the “City County (District)” Column in Provincial Comprehensive Yearbooks Chen Chaoping (61)

Currently there are malpractices of abusive quotations of the annual Government Work Report in the general introduction and typical entries sections of the city county (district) column in provincial comprehensive yearbooks. And in terms of selection of topics in entries, there are phenomenon of too many recordings of achievements of routine work with too few recordings of major issues and social changes; too many recordings of official achievements with too few recordings of the lives of ordinary folks; and too many recordings of superficial events with too few recordings of information with depth. Therefore, the writing requirements of the city county (district) column of provincial comprehensive yearbooks must be standardized to streamline the general introduction and to optimize the entries.
